Dear Faithful in Christ,

In a recent homily, I stated that we should all be reading from the Bible every day. A couple of questions that can come up are: What Bible to read? And what to read in the Bible?

The version of the Bible that is probably the most widespread among Traditional Catholics is the Douay-Rheims-Challoner. The Douay-Rheims is actually older than the King James Version; it is now known that the KJV translators borrowed significantly from the Douay-Rheims. Around 1750, Bp. Challoner did a revision of the Douay-Rheims to update some of the phrasings that had become too obscure with the passage of time. In 1860, Abp. Kenrick, best known for his seminary, also did his own revision of the Douay-Rheims and added very copious notes. Unfortunately, this version does not seem to be available in print, but electronic copies are available on sites such as archive.org. The best version of the Bible in current-day English, in my opinion, is the Catholic Edition of the English Standard Version (ESVCE), published as the Augustine Bible. It is straightforward in style and dignified in tone. The New Catholic Bible (NCB) is also a good, recent translation from 2019, commissioned by the Catholic Book Publishing Corporation. They have an edition of the New Testament that has remarkable study helps and references. Let me know if you are interested in seeing a copy. If you read any languages besides English, let me know. There are some recommendations I could make.

Note, it is perfectly fine to have one version that you read for devotional reasons and another for study. Comparing translations can sometimes throw light on a difficult passage. The Catholic Comparative New Testament has a number of versions side-by-side. I'll get to the second question I posed next time.

Fr. Rickert
